ATHENS FESTIVAL 1979

Every summer, at the foot of the venerable rock of the Acropolis and against the background of the golden, mellowed Parthenon in an environment where the dim past blends dramatically with the present, thousands of greeks and foreign visitors, sitting on the marble tiers of the Herod Atticus Odeon, enjoy theatre, opera, music, ballet and modern dance performances presented by the Athens Festival. The Odeon was built in 161 A.D., by Herod Atticus, in memory of his wife, Regilla, in the style of Roman theaters of the period, which its stage raised to a height of 1.10 meters. The stage wall, three storeys high, was decorated with columns in the Corinthian style and rounded or square niches for statues, while the auditorium was probably surrounded by a large, semi-circular arcade. The roof was of cedar wood. Athens Festival presentations began twenty-five years ago and have received international recognition. The Festival performances form the most important artistic summer event in Athens and it aims for the highest artistic ideals by linking the ancient heritage and the modern, with European tradition.

EPIDAUROS FESTIVAL

Performances began in 1954 and from 1955 they became an established institution for the presentation of ancient drama, gradually acquiring international repute. Every summer since, thousands of spectators from Greece and abroad, have visited the ancient theatre at Epidauros to attend performances of ancient tragedy and comedy, produced by the National Theatre, the Northern Greece State Theatre and Art Theatre. The theatre at Epidauros seats 14,000 persons and was built to plans drawn by the architect Polykleitos the Younger, in the 3rd century B.C. It is renowned for its acoustics and its idyllic location.

By road, Epidauros is 178 kms. from Athens, via Corinth and Nauplion. It is 20 kms. distant from the small port of Palaia Epidauros. A new highway, via Isthmia, shortens the drive to Epidauros to 154 kms. Excursion clubs and travel agencies combine attendance at the Festival with visits to the archeological sites at Epidauros, the temple of Asklepeios, the Tholos, the Guesthouse, the Stadium, the Katagogion and other sites in Argolis Province. Swimming is available off the beaches of Kinetta, Nauplion, Palaia Epidauros, to mention a few locations.

At the Epidauros Festival site, easy parking is available as well as meals in the Tourist Pavillion and nearby towns. It is a pleasant trip to Epidauros and a comfortable return journey, following the performance.
